

Problem Statement

First-year college students need an easier, time-efficient way to budget their money because first-year students do not realize how much they spend in the first year.

Details

First-year college students across the nation all experience the same problem, and it is how to successfully manage their money throughout the school year. The problem is students spend more money than they should save through their first year. The problem presents itself usually during winter break going into the second semester. Budgeting and saving money matters so students do not have to worry about not scraping by through the year.